Five killed in air show collision at Biggin Hill

Five people were killed yesterday at the Biggin Hill air show when a helicop-ter was in collision with a Tiger Moth and then plummeted on to a parked air-craft waiting to take off. The dead, including two young brothers, were all on board the helicopter which was on a fiveminute, £3 a head joy-ride. The collision happened less than 100ft from the ground. The Tiger Moth, which was struck in the fuselage, landed safely though its pilot, and passenger were taken to hospital. The pilot of the grounded Cessus aircraft escaped almost unhurt.

Two members of the Department of Trade's accidents investigation branch went to the scene of the crash and will report their findings to the Chief Inspec-

Mr Fitt urges Ulster talks after ending of 'loyalist' strike

From Robert Parker

A call for political and constitutional talks after Northern Ireland's local elections on Wednesday was made yesterday by Mr Gerard Fitt, leader of the mainly Roman latholic Social Democratic and abour Party.

The move comes in the wake of the ending of the United Unionist Action Council strike after 11 days of limited success Mr Fitz suggested that the Rev Ian Paisley and Mr Ernest Baird, two of the main organizers, would have to be excluded from such talks. "They would never succeed if they were there."

He said: "Mr Paisley and Mr Baird have now totally isolated themselves. They were motivated by anti-Catholic and anti-minority bias and now that they have been isolated the way could be open for new talks between all the political parties of Northern Ireland." Mr Fire also praised Mr Mason, Secretary of State, for his handling of the strike. His conduct during the strike leads me to withdrew anything I said when he was appointed. He showed himself to be a person who would not be builted.

The sprike had also seen tha emergence of a new degree of acceptance of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. He said he was speaking for most Catholics when he said that the RUC had demonstrated an impressive degree of impartiality.

It is thought that some members of the Official Unionist Party, led by Mr Harry West.

There are deep stirrings in the Independent Republican and Reformers parties, and criticism of the old guard. This weekend the Radical Socialist Party, "the grand old party" of the Third and Pourth Republic, elected M Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber to its presidency after an eclipse of nearly the woon page by two years. He won easily by 465 votes to 340 for M Edgar Faure, the president of the National Assembly.

Relations between M Servan-Schreiber and the Radical Socialist Party have often been strained and stormy. He was forced to resign the presidency in July, 1975, before his term was up because of criticism of his policy and methods. But he is nothing if not dynamic and forceful, and that is what the party rauk and file felt was called for before the general election.

M Edgar Faure, a Radical Socialist of the older school, was Prime Minister under the Fourth Republic. He then railed to General de Gaulle and served several times as a minister, without ever, he claims, ceasing to be a Radical

M Edgar Faure, who was greeted with "Faure-Chirac" shouts, denied that he was a "Trojan horse" of the Gaullist leader. The Radicals must be a "party of successful reforms, nor of proclaimed reforms, he said in a dig at M Servan-Schreiber.

The victim himself, who sounced tired but rational as he talked about his kidnapping, thought that the Neapolitan and the man in the neapostal underworld had been involved in some way on this occasion with political elements. The father is still an important figure in left-wing affairs, despite his removal from the secretaryship of the party at national level, as he still leads the Neapolitan Socialists. The release was taken as a genuine cause for rejoicing

The Naples area is now becoming a centre for kid-napping. While Signor de Martino's captors were preparing to release him, a food wholesaler, Signor Michelangelo Ambrosio, was abducted on Friday. His was the third kidnapping in the Naples area in six mooths and the thirtieth so far this year

The combination of political and common crime marked the whole weekend. In Milan a policeman shot during political disorders yesterday died today without regaining consciousness.

In Rome, a youth who yesterday shot and severely wounded a municipal policeman who stopped him for a minor traffic infringement, is now said to belong to one of the extreme left-wing movements behind the recent violence. He, wo, is Nezoolitan.

There is much speculation that foreign powers may be in-volved in inciting this violence. The weekly news magazine Panorama considers the possibility of interference by the secret services of at least six countries—the Soviet Union, the United States, Israel, West Germany, China and Czechoslovakia, all of whom are seen to be interested in preventing any further step by the Italian

There was a good moment when the result of the Double-Century Club draw was given. The announcer had to retire from business temporarily, because he had won it. What is more, two other of the five winners had some official-connexion with the county. There were loud cries from the bars of what I take to be the Welsh equivalent of "Fiz. Fix". But as the Australian acting captain had made the draw the comments remained jocular.

The Australians, for a little, made hutting look much easier than Gladorgan had done, but were faced by a testing spell from Nash, well supported by Cordle. Twenty was up in the fifth over when Robinson was bowled, and

Graeme Pollock: bringing South Africa back to public

S Africa to follow

From Ray Kennedy Johannesburg, May 15 The five South African cricket stars who have signed to play in Kerry Packer's cricket circus might be outlawed by their own national body, the South African Cricket Association (SACA). This Cricket Association 15ACA). This is because South Africa are hoping 10 for readmitted to Test cricket later this year. The association's president, Dennis Dyer, said today the SACA vill follow the same time adopted by the buards making up the ICC—England, Australia, New Zealand, West ludies, India and Pakintan. If they decided to ban players taking part in the sunor series. "The no doubt we'll do what the ICC do", Mr Dyer said at his home in Durban.

do ", Mr Dyer said at his home in Durban.

The five South Africans who have signed three-year contracts with Mr Packer are batsmen Crueme Pollock and Barry Richards, the all-rounders Eddie Battow and Michael Procter and the bowler, Denys Hobson. South Africa are hoping to apply for readmission to international cricket later this year and will certainly not damage their chances by adopting a un'internal policy. Mr Dyer said: "If, however, the different boards are at loggerneads in the matter and go their different ways, that would be another unter and South Africa would be able to take its own decision on Manchester matter and South Africa would be able to take its own decision on the merits of the case."

He added; "We are proceeding steadily towards our goals of one unlified cricket body in South Africa and the normalization of the game and once we have achieved these we will be in a position to fulfil the requirements of the ICC and be readmitted as a member. This seems to be a logical step and I can't see South Africa taking univatival action logical step and I can't see South Africa taking unilateral action against a policy laid down by the other boards regarding the new vapoure which would, perhaps, alienate us further. Derek Hardwick, of Dorset, president of the International Lawn leans Federation, made the tongest and least interesting speech at the annual banquet of the World Championship Tenus organization here last evening. But he was recovering from a long flight. The fact that he has been such an honoured guest here is encouraging evidence of a rapprochement between the ILTF and WCT.

Formed in 1967, WCT sixelerated the introduction of open competition and the upheaval that it caused. They gave professional tennis a coherence and sense of purpose k had previously lacked. But in the process they had sharp differences with the ILTF and at best the relationship has been uneasy. It will probably remain so, But next year, for the first time, the WCT circuit will be lart of the men's international grand prix series though their showpiece play-off events at Kansas City (doubles) and Dalias (singles) remain outside the grand prix.

and Dahas (singles) remain notative the grand prix.

This arongement could endure as long as WCT feel that separate identity is not being too heavily diluted. The merger will certainly bring a little more sense to the international fixture list. In this area the big task now is to make sure that the Davis Cup competition and the American intercipy in-lems in tennis today are scheduling and the players' conduct on court. There cannot be much argument about that.

As expected, Jimmy Connors and Richard Stockton reached the final of the seventh WCF slogical tournament here. After much initial difficulty Connors managed to beat Edoic Dibbs in straight sets. Bedford's return to big time is postponed

David Bediord's big return to Crystal Palace, the scene of his world 10.000 metres record, has been put off. Influence has sent him to bed and he will not now run in the jubilee meeting, sponsored by Philips Electrical, on Wednesday.

Also out is lan Stewart, the former European and Commonwealth champion who has an ankle injury which will prevent him from running for 10 days. "Of course I am deeply disappointed for the crowd, but even more sorry for David. This was to have been his big moment after all the injury trouble he has had in the past three years", Alan Pascoe, the meeting organizer, said.

Bedford has surprised many by the way he has fought back against the odds to regain much of his old fitness. He won the Southern Counties 5,000 metres at second in z fast 3,000 metres at Southern Counties 5,000 metres title a few weeks ago, and came second in a fast 3,000 metres at Oxford, to Neil Coupland, who is in Wednesday's line-up. Also running in the 5,000 metres will be David Black and Bergie Ford and Portugal's Olympic 10,000 metres silver medal winner Carlos Lopes.

Defiation tather than clation seemed to be in the air around the Liverpool dressing room on Saturday night. There was champagine and congratulations and, from the more emotional, some tears of relief. There was also a certain hard inevitability about the championsing going to Anfield again, because none of the other leading contenders really made a comparable claim.

On the motorway much later one felt the infectious delight of people who had not been quite so sure of themselves. The coach travellers of wolvertampous wanderers were still making their way home after celebrating promotion to the first division with a 1-0 win over Bolton Washeers, who needed two points to keep Nothingham Forst from taking the third promotion place. A columna interest in Avoiding defeat was at the core. The fact that Liverpool had not been conquered at Aufteld this season night have seemed a reson to think they would risk conceding a goal or two in the cause of a splendid victory on which to end their domestic season. That may have been the original plant but West Ham, despite their position, can still play to a high standard and within 10 minutes it was obvious that a mutually salisfactory draw would be agreeable.

Their defence kept Johnson, Keegan and the substitute, Fair-clough, well under control, and Robson, despite missing the best opportunity of the game just before the innerval, was still the sharpest forward on view.

Liverpool were again susceptible to the high centre and often survived only by the boundless energy of Hughes, who clearly relished the day and, towards the end, uncharacteristically clasped the point by playing as many lateral passes as he would mustly use in a formight.

role of bridesmaid

Yet again, Bolton Wanderers must be coment to be bridesmaid. A single goal to Wolverhampton Wanderers, already second division champions, cast them in the role, madging the third promotion place just beyond reach at the last moment for the second consecution. last moment for the second con-secutive season, and leaving Nottingham Forest to join the happy couple already assured of higher status. Unless, that is, Bolton win their final match by the phenomenal margin of 14-goals.

An afternoon of sweat and roll, had only years at the end of it.

An afternoon of sweat and roll, had only tears at the end of it, for Bolton were up against a side of true championship quality, equipped to tailor their game to the needs of the moment. Wolves were undoubtedly the more resourceful, breaking quickly to assume threatening, positions early on, always in close harmony and marshalling themselves shrewdly to absorb the tremendous pressures when Bolton hurled at them all but the proand marshalling themselves. shrewdly to absorb the tremendous pressures when Bolton burled at them all but the proverbial kitchen sink.

Munro was one of the torks on which Bolton's hopes of first division football were cruelly dashed; he limped off half an hour from the end, but still the fine mesh wolves stretched in from of Pierce proved impenetratible. Pierce himself was superb, dealing immaculately with a stream of high balls, always a thought shead of Bolton's best intentions. Carr and Hibbitt pointed the directions and it was a piece of cunning by the pair of them which undernimed Bolton.

In Carr's Coventry days, one piece of nimble inventiveness; in which he flicked a free Eck upwards with both feet for, a colleague to score on the volley while the opposition stood openmonthed, became television folksione. Now he was just as calculating; Hibbitt ran pest the ball and headed through Bolton's ranks.

immediately alongside the ball, as if he had changed his mind. With the defence momentarily lulled, he suddenly chipped the ball forward for Hibbitt, now free, to turn and shoot unchallenged by anyone but the goalkeeper. The ball struck McDonagh and rolled gently just inside a post Bolton appealed for offside, but Mr. Partridge, rightly, it seemed, waved their protests aside.

So, after 20 minutes, Bolton's view of the first division became a speck on the horizon. They did not lose sight of it meekly, though. For a time they pinned their faith in Morgan's shuffling footwork along the left flank, but then decided that their best hope lay in using their hig men to outginny wolves, and drafted them forward to reach for a stream of high centres. Allardyce was their principal weapon; he struck the top of the bar and three times leapt that little bit higher than the rest to head the ball an inch or two wide.

How Mr Carter plans to turn the government inside out

President Carter is determined to reorganize the executive branch of the government. He does not intend merely to tamper with the structure and intro-duce a handful of popular and cosmetic changes. His aim is nothing less than the wholesale reform of more than 2,000 departments, agencies, permanent commissions and other government entities.

This task is breathtaking in its magni tude and complexity. Lessons of value will be produced for foreign governments and for students of government by the manner in which the President strives to schieve his declared goal of making "government more responsive, efficient and

A strong case can be made for scenticism about the chances of success in this endeavour, which the President admits will take at least four years to accomp-lish. The bureaucracy in the United States, as elsewhere, loathes change and is effective in striving to resist it. The number of pressure groups keen to main tain existing arrangements is considerable, and their influence is formidable. The attitudes of the Congress to the re-organization plans, which it will have the power to veto, are difficult to predict.

The Brookings Institution is currently

The Brookings Institution is currently preparing an analysis on the reorganization efforts and one of its senior fellows says the conclusions will be far from encouraging. A recent visiting group of members of the House of Commons concluded, after an administration briefing on the plans, that they may well achieve the onposite results to those intended—more red tape, more inefficiency, more civil servants and more peneral confusion. more general confusion.

The sceptics may be proved wrong for a change and this reorganization attempt may indeed produce substantial benefits. The President accurately gauges the degree of public disenchantment with degree of public disenchantment with existing governmental arrangements. He appears to have the skill to use public opinion to influence those in Congress who may seek to frustrate his aims.

Then a major aim of this project is to sharply reduce governmental regulation of business, so directly strengthening the private enterprise system. Companies are now so fed up with the huge volume government forms they must complete and the myriad of regulations they must comply with, that President Carter can comply with that President Carter tour rely on the business community for considerable support in this area.

The President has already decreed that all new government reguations must be signed by their authors and written in non-legal language, and this in itself is something of an improvement. He has also decreed that only three our of every four current vacancies in the civil service can be filled. But he has also sought support for his schemes from the bureaucracy by giving assurances that no civil servant ill become unemployed as a result of reorganization, and that the likely staff cuts that will be proposed will be achieved. cuts that will be proposed will be achieved hrough norma wastage ".

The President has sought to deflate

the vigour of potential opponents, while at the same time demonstrating the earnestness of his intentions, by making his own office the first area for reorgan-ization. The President's executive office consists of 18 specialized sections and 52 special advisory committees, and the plan for its reorganization is scheduled for completion in June.

The President's determination is re-flected in his choice of who shall oversee the reorganization task. Nobody in the White House is quite so personally close to the President as his old friend from Georgia, Mr Bert Lance, the director of the office o management and budget, Mr Lance, whose huge physique adds to his image of powerfulness, is a direct, outspoken proponent of managerial efficiency who can speak with an authority in the new administration that makes him already talked of as, the "deputy president". He has assembled a 32-man special team to conduct what the President has said will be "a searching, examination of the entire federal structure ".

The administration now best the green light to move ahead with its plans, having convinced the Congress to approve the necessary legislation. This gives the necessary legislation. This gives the President the authority for three years to propose reorganization schemes that will become effective, unless disapproved of by the Congress, within 60 days of their nnouncement As Mr Lance notes, the unique feature of this reorganization effort, outte apart from its sheer size, is that its starting point is not the current set of institutional arrangements, but rather "first of all the people and how to rework the structure and the governmental process to meet

Doing away with secrecy in government is a main priority. After the Vietnam war and Watergate, the demands for open government in the United States are probably greater than in most other developed any greater toan in most other developed democracies. In response to these demands and in an effort to ensure public support for reorganization, much of the reorgani-zation planning itself will be done in the onen, and efforts are to be made imme distely to ensure that the public has access to all government proceedings and documents, subject only to the rights of citizens to privacy and genuine national security concerns.

Plans for the reorganization of key rians for the government will be an actions of the government will be an action of the government will be at the same time efforts will be made to initiate broad reforms of government practices. Thus, for example, the whole vast system of social welfare and food stamp allocation is to be reformed with plant due to the plant due to t is to be reformed, with plans due soon, while, in the name of reorganization the United States tax code is now being revised and simplified.

In addition, as an integral part of the reorganization effort, all government agencies are bring forced immediately to start reviewing every one of their activities by using zero-based budgeting techniques.

to a budget, as was once suggested, but rather this concept forces departments to evaluate the costs of all current programmes and not merely devote their energies to justifying cost increases. This is a concept, notes Mr Lance, that enforces budgetary discipling on all sections of the government: "It is vital to reorganization."

Mr Lance points out that "there are too many agencies in government. We just don't need that many. We need to do something about it.", and he leaves a visitor in absolutely no doubt that a main purpose of his coming to Washington and taking a huge income cut as a con-sequence—is to reduce size of this sprawling bureaucracy.

But pairing the dimensions of the Civil Service and so saving taxpayers' money is not the chief criterion upon which Mr Lance would like reorganization to be judged. He notes that his efforts will only be seen to pay off after a number of years. when it will be possible to analyse just how much more government services would have cost without reorganization and when it is most evident that reorganization has made "The delivery of services more

He stresses that reorganization is a longterm process that must seek to make government procedures more intelligible to the general public ; that clearly determines what tasks government can and cannot do; that makes government more responsive to public needs: that defines precisely who is accountable for government programmes and rewards those who do their relationships between federal, state and local governments "to ensure a balanced parmership and better coordination."

The task is immense, but so too is the determination of those charged with carrying it out. Every reorganization plan is going to be carefully watched and only after the first plan is announced this summer will there be some evidence upon which to assess Mr Lance's ability. It is as well to note in looking at this tack just how large the framework of re-organization is. The following list shou'd take the breath away of everyone who does not have Mr Lance's stamina.

- The executive branch of the federal sov-eroment consists of the President's office and of 11 Cabinet-level departments with 767 advisory committees, 34 commissions or boards, and 332 sub-agencies. Then there are 55 executive agencies with 46 related commissions and boards, 366 permanent advisory committees, 63 sub-agencies and eight additional related sub-commissions. And then there are 129 interagency committees. 17 wholly nwned government corporations, 11 semi-government-owned companies, six private organizations with official government parnicipation, 97 International organizations with United States participation—not to mention the Central Intelligence Agency which may or may not fall under Mr Lance's sharp reforming e--

Live for the first time: what it was like for Tommy in the trenches

The trouble with history is that it is written by historians; and historians are strictly limited by the sources available to them. Records are kept of only a few forms of human activity. Diaries are kept by only a small and unrepresentative class of humans. So history has to concentrate on kings, generals, and politicians; wars, empires, and revolutions. Accordingly the history of political power has been ele-vated into acting as if it were the whole story of mankind.

.The only historian capable of writing the complete history of triankind would be the Recording Angel, and he may attach less importance to power and politics than we do. But while we wait for his definitive and awesome publication, the recording machines of oral history are providing a new tool for historians, and lighting up previously unrecorded areas and aspects of

In July the Sound Records Department of the Imperial War Museum will be opening to the public for the first time some of the riches from this new source of history that it has been tapping and taping for the past five years. Professional his-torians, reachers, and the general public will be able to listen to worm's eye accounts from the sort of people who did not keep diaries or write memoirs of what it was really like in the trenches or as a conscientious objector in the First World

The department has now accumulated about 3.000 hours of recorded oral history among to keep a man listening non-stop for a working year and a half. They come from threee sources. Some have been acnuired from broadcasting organizations, for example the comprehensive and magni-ticent BEC sound archives of the Second World War and the complete recordings of the Nuremburg War Crimes Trials. A few recordings have come from private gifts. Most have been recorded by the department itself, seeking to illuminate the dark and unrecorded places of the history of our century while there are still people alive who were there.

The department first selects a quite narrow subject to investigate, for example, life on the lower deck of the Royal Navy between 1910 and 1922, or the British Army in India between the wars. It then spends some weeks in consultation with specialists in that particular subject, drawing up a project paper that details the sort of questions that need answers and areas that need exploration. It then starts look-ing for suitable witnesses of unrecorded history by such methods as advertisements in the national, local, and specialist press, and by communication with regimental and other associations.

It draws up a short list of perhaps 50 volunteers to be interviewed, trying to maintain a fair proportion of informants on the different aspects of the subject : for example; in the project about life on the lower deck, it was easy to find seamen and men from the engine room, but difficult to track down such rure tradesmen as

The Keeper of the department, David Lance, specializes in military history; his deputy, Margaret Brooks, in civilian history, for example the pacifists, war artists, and workers in munition factories. They have a staff of five, two freelance secretaries who transcribe selected tapes, and a new recording studio that makes those at Broadcasting House look obsolescent.

The interviewer has a long prenaratory discussion with his informant, and from it and the overall project paper draws up a systematic plan of questioning. Then he comes back on another day to do the interview, which may produce anything from half an hour to 12 hours of tape. This is then catalogued, indexed, transcribed if it is particularly important, perhaps used in an edited instructional rape, and put in the

This process is producing three classes of historical material that were not available before. First there is original information that was previously unknown: for example, details of how canteen messing worked in the Roval Navy before the system was superseded in 1928, what those ancient marines ate, how they cooked it,

The second class is additional information that fills gaps: for example, the original test pilots explain why and how the prototype aircraft of the First World War had to be modified. Oral history is a powerful too! because it enables the historian to put the questions he wants, instead of having to depend on the records that somebody else, not a historian, chose to keen. The third and most important class of new material might be described as sersual information. We may know roughly from the records and manuals what equipment Sapper wireless operator in the front line on the Western Front had to carry. But his own description of it helps us to understand better what it was like.

woman ambulance, driver describing how she was converted to pacifism in a flash when she saw Londoners dancing in the streets because 60 Germans were being roasted alive overhead in their Zoone in adds emotional death to understanding not found in the written evidence of tribuna's for conscientious objectors.

From July scholars, schoolchildren, and the rest of us will be able to share in this deeper understanding of our previously unrecorded past either by going to the museum to listen for ourselves, or be but-ing selected copies of these historial recordings and transcripts.

Narciso Yepes Festival Hall

Thomas Walker

Although the Spanish guitarist Narciso Yepes has performed many times in London, Fri-day's recital was his first in Festival Hall. That is not the most intimate environment for the grater, even one with (I believe) 12 strings, but Mr Yepes proved he could fill the hall with heaviful and comenter sounds, if not quite with not throng to hear his excep-tionally adroit and musical playing, although, in view of playing, almough, in view of the programme, a limited shame. His choice of work seemed adventurous and in-teresting ostensibly covering five centuries of masc, with pieces from the statement to the eighteenth century occupying eighteenth century occupying the first half, and more recent thems the second.

The earliest pieces of course, were not intended for an instrument like the one Mr Yepes wielded, and one suspec-ted that they gained more than they lost in the transfer. He certainly had his own way with an anonymous "Kurd Dance", full of rhythmic jolts and end-full of rhythmic joirs and ending with a die-away. And I wonder if the selection of Dances from the statement century French lutanist Antoine Francisque's Le Trésor d'Orphée had not been substantially doctored.

Whether they had or not, Mr Yepes's treatment did about as much to revive them as one had any right to expect, but they were unexciting pasients. had any right to expect; but they were unexciting patients. A pair of works by two contemporaries of Beethoven yielded more gratifying results. Fernando Sor's Variations on "Marlborough" was more than bearable, and Mauro Giuliaar's Sonatins in D major, Op 71, a most attractive post-classical rithit. Mr Yepes's flexible handling of rhythm contained odd, though pleasing, echoes of such pianists as Schnabel. I can do micely without the neo-Spanish schmaltz of Antonio Ruiz-Pipo's Songs and Dances and Mutsus Shishido's Prelude and Toccata, or the ill-conceived pictorial accompani-

Musical reputations are not easily or cheaply made, and one must applaud such schemes as the Maisie Lewis Young Artists' Fund, administered by the Worshipful Company of Musicians. On Friday the musificence of Sir Edward Lewis brought to the South Bank six no strangers to those halls; will surely have been helped by the experience.

I hope that David Wilson-Johnson, the baritone, for instance, will have taken note that he can sing quietly and still be heard, and that he can wit into his performances. He has a good English voice, firm and well rounded, but there is with that the danger of posiposity if some degree of free dom is not allowed On this occasion his singing was markedly more lively and compelling when he let himself

Appearing under the auspices of a company with the motto
"Preserve Harmony", Mr "Preserve Harmony", Mr. Wilson-Johnson was brave to include two songs of Schoenberg, though wise to tread no further than Op 1. No less unusual was his selection of 11 songs by Balfour Gardiner, a group spanning the composer's career from his schooldays to just before the silence of his last quarter century. That was an interesting survey, although I confess the strongest memory is of "While Greasy Joan Doth Keel the Pot", thrown out as a brusque challenge. Sharing the recital with Mr Sharing the recital with Mr Wilson-Johnson were the Coull Quartet, who played Mendelssohn's A minor guartet and the D major work from Haydn's Op 20. If I say that the performances were fresh and clear, that is not to imply that they were in any way immature, merely that they were achieved with precise numbers and conwith precise purpose and con-trol. I particularly liked the players' happy dexterity in the Haydn quick movements and

Mr Wilson-Johnson, who was most ably partnered by David Owen Norris in his songs, was joined by the quartet for an account of Barber's Dower Beach which displayed fine qualities on all sides.

London debut occurred, before the local punk cognoscenti, in a congested Covent Garden cel-lar on Friday night. Like Television, Talking Heads work for a sound which is hard and metallic enough to sarisfy the new generation of listeners. Unlike their British

THE OPEN UNIVERSITY

CREEKS TUTORS and THTOL COUNSELLORS

In 1978 the University will be offering 117 courses in six broad areas: Arts. Educational Studies. Mathemat-ics, Science, Social Sciences and Technology. The courses are based on an integrated structure of correspondence assignments, radio and television broadcasts and a regionally organized tutorial and counselling system.

COURSE TUTORS are responsible for commenting on and grading students' written assignments, for reply-ing to queries about students' work and for conduct-ing tutorials, pormally at local study centres.

TUTOR COUNSELLORS have duties similar to Course Tutors in relation to the fultion of a group; of students on one of the five Foundation courses. They also have courselling responsibilities for a larger group of students on both Foundation and higher level courses, where they are required to give study advice to individual students and to help in organizing discussion groups at local study centres.

The time needed for University duties varies according the ame needed for otherway duties varies exceeding to individual contracts, but on average will occupy perhaps one evening per week or its equivalent for most of the year. Appointments will, in the first instance, be tenable for one year.

Applicants should be graduates or graduate equival-ent. Recent reaching experience in further adult or higher education is highly desirable. For certain courses industrial experience would also be an

The Editor of 'The Times' on Peter Jay's appointment as ambassador in Washington

When I heard of Peter Jay's appointment as ambassador in Washington, I was sorry for The Times's sake, but otherwise delignted. Although I strongly disapprove of the unfahrden augustus and augustus aug (and surely inappropriate?) criticism that Peter Jay's appointment is an excellent one. The criticism of Sir Jeter Ramsbotham is both unfair and absurd. It is part of an ambassador's job to entertain the leading society of the capital in which he is working, because that is the society which has influence. All ambassadors invite powerful, entertaining, influential, intelligent and if possible beautiful people to their dinner tables. If this s snobbery, it is necessary snobbery. The unsuccessful ambassadors are those to whose tables only the dull and stupid come. Sir Peter has not been among them.

Nevertheless the critics of the new appointment miss two crucial points. The first is that Britain's reputation among serious-minded Americans is at present alarmingly low—as any-one who travels regularly in North America discovers. A new approach to that problem is fully justified. The of the most important business to be transacted through the Washington bassy is now economic or trade business. The Foreign Service does not have an economist in the same class as Peter Jay. Yet these matters should be discussed with knowledge and with personal authority.

In the past few weeks I have happened to give a number of talks in the United States and Canada on to business groups, to a conference organized by the Canadian Progressive Conservative Party, to students, to the United States Senate Assistance and on radio and television. My line with those we have expressed in The Times. I think of myself as gloomy, but I found myself universally regarded as an optimist. All the news from Britain has been so bad, for so long, that most Americans regard us as being in unque trouble, as a society on the point of collapse. In my experience the Foreign Office line, which is, understandably enough, one of general defence and support for the British record, is simply not believed.

If I had been asked to advise, with no idea of Peter Jay's appointment in my mind. I would have suggested that the next ambassador should be that the next ambassador should be someone very good on television, preferably young and of dynamic appearance, able to deal convincingly and realistically with the most tough minded questions about the economic

As so often, the truth is the best propaganda. The truth is that British Leyland is not typical of British industry, but you cannot convince an anticonverse of the convence and the convence of the convence audience of that unless you are frank about the trouble British Leyland is in. For all practical purposes the British message can only be carried on television, and the British ambassador will receive television ability as a performer.

I also welcome Peter Jay's appointment on other grounds. The war hrought people forward very young.
Gradually the postwar period has slipped back into the prewar or even pre-1914 pattern of slow and late promotion, even for the ablest. Peter is exceptionally able. I have worked with him for more than 10 years. His intellectual gifts, if intellect consists of the capacity the rapid analysis of complex conthe rapid analysis of complex con-cepts, seem to me to be superior to, those of anyone I have worked with in journalism, or indeed of anyone I have met who is at present in the public service. Since the death of Tony Crosland, Peter has probably been cleverer than anyone on either-Front Bench. This can hardly be regarded as a dispublification, as he is also extremely easy to work with. is also extremely easy to work with, being loyal, kind and good humoured. I am also very grareful to him personally for his development of the economic views of The Times. His own major change in economic thinking began in 1969, when he spent a very successful year working for the paper in Washington; it had been fascinating to follow the intellectual process that led to it.

At last politicians see the Soviet threat, but they have yet to decide how to meet it

A funny thing happened to me on the way to the theatre tho other evening. As the delegates to the summir meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization assembled on the South Bank last Tuesday to see a performance of Julius Caesar, one of them told me that, in the official communique of the meeting, the heads of governcrowing military strength of the Soviet Union. It seemed at the time an unlikely story, even given the willing suspension of lisbelief brought on by close proximity to Sir John Gielgud. But it was, indeed, so. The Presidents and Prime Ministers tho, you all know, are honourother things a particular con-cern bout the continuing growth in the strength and offensive capabilities of the armed forces of the Warsaw Pact countries. So, at last, the unlinical doublespeak has given ray to a clear recognition, at the highest level, of the reality—a reality which has been blindingly obvious for some time to western military leaders, and to one or two interested outside observers as well.

Now that it has achieved the respectability of inscription in a prime ministerial communi-que, it is perhaps in order to a prime ministerial communique, it is perhaps in order to consider whether the West proposes to do anything about it—such as, for example, repairing some of the more serious weaknesses in our own defence.

The logic as in the views of some of the academics, seems to suggest that the Russian military build-up springs military build-up springs not from any aggressive or imperialistic intent, but from a basic insecurity. The Soviet Union, it is argued, feels itself surrounded by hostile nations and threatened by the military strength of the Americans and

Furthermore, the present huge armaments programme springs from policy decisions taken as long arm as the date 1960s, when American involve-ment in Vietnam was still sig-nificant and the Soviet Union was faced with its own local difficulty in Czechoslovakia.

Finally, it is suggested, the soviet leadership consists almost exclusively of men who lived through the Second Soviet World War and who therefore have no interest in provoking something which would be destruction and suffering.

To this the service chiefs demands of basic security do not require the establishment of such overwhelming military superiority. Furthermore, it is suid, the present Russian leadership may have no aggressive tendencies, but their successors may well have different ideas. Military power, to adapt an aphorism of Edmund Burke, is a dangerous thing to Surke, is a dangerous thing to leave lying around.

The military consensus, quite simply expressed, is that the Soviet Union is rapidly acquir-ing the capacity to go to war with very little warning and with a substantial expectation of success; and that even if it does not use that capacity in military operations, it will certainly exploit it as a decisive factor in its political dealings with the West.
This is the dilemma which the political leaders of the western alliance have to resolve. It is a bility. If the academic logicians are right, overreaction to the Russian military build-up might permanently destroy any pos-sibility of a peaceful world in which conflicting political and ideological systems can pursue their legitimate interests with-our doing damage to each other; but, if the military grammarians are right, any delay in responding to the Russian challenge might lay the West open to a disastrous and irreversible defeat—possibly by force of arms, but, summit meetings suggests that the western powers intend to persevere with their attempts to of strategic nuclear weapons and on the reduction of conand on the reduction of conventional forces in Europe; and that they will press for the implementation of all the provisions of the Helsinki declaration—not simply those which happen to be convenient to those who signed it. At the same time the West has recognized—in theory at least—the foolishment of trains to confoolishness of trying to con-duct these negotiations from a position of weakness and con-fusion. The intention is to im-prove the efficiency of the existing Nato defences; to pro-vide a more effective system of reinforcement, especially in the context of the realization that there would, in present that there would, in present circumstances, be much shorter warning of the Soviet actack than our political leaders have been able to count on in the past; and to create a "two-way traffic" in Nato's programme of armaments and equipment so that standardization means something more than a requirement that everyone should buy American.

The next year or so is likely, therefore, to be crucial to the survival of the West. It will sion to translate into reality the euphoric aspirations of the London conference, But, what is more important, the next move is essentially for the Russians to make. If they are prepared to negotiate seriously across the spectrum of detente, and if they are prepared to call a halt to their apparently endless accretion of military strength one climate of inter-national relations might be dramatically transformed. If, however, as seems more likely they show no disposi-tion to conciliate, the impli-cations are clear. There will not only be growing pressure on the West to rearm; there will be other consequences as ssume that they can so ong at they present a consis-ently hostile aspect, count tently hostile aspect, count indefinitely upon economic and technical assistance from the west to protect them from the worst consequences of their disastrous agricultural system and their inefficient and technologically backward industry-especially when that assistance allows them to divert precious resources into the creation of a powerful and threatening military machine.

It is for the Soviet Union to decide; but the West, in the meantime, cannot afford to take irresponsible risks with its security. The governments of the free world, not least that of Britain, must recognize that they can no longer try to solve their immediate econo-mic-problems by backing away another support from the pre-carious structure of our mili-tary defences. If they do, they will have demonstrated that the London summit was just another expensive and mean-ingless exercise in the extrusion of verbal material, or, to use the more elegant style of Cassius, an affair of fautasy, of dreams and ceremonies.

The spokesman for some of high intellectual quality, proof the main institutes, PEP, The Royal Institute of International Affairs, the National Institute of Economic and Social Research and now the Institute of Economic Affairs, have had their say and The Times has produced a balanced leading article favourable to Professor Dahrendorf's plea for a British

If I come down against this proposal it is not merely because I had some hand in the founding of PEP, and certainly not because I am critical of American initiatives or Brookings in particular. But I am sceptical of transplanting social or educational institutions from one country to another, chiefly because such institutions are the product of national social conditions an ! indeed traditions prevailing in the country con-corned. I could, if space allowed, give several examples illustrate this particular tical with the aims and objec-tives of PEP for the past 46 years. I remember a letter from Sir A. Carr-Saunders, then principal of LSE, relating to a request from a foreign country to establish the equivalent of PEP on its soil. He said that it would be useless to send them a constitution with aims and objectives. He suggested a public history which conveyed the idea of PEP, its promotion, ways in which the knowledge can be applied.

This fourduction in "matter moulded forms of speech" can afford little indication of the sense of excitement felt by the founding fathers; it also fails to explain why busy men of affairs, industrialists, architects, financiers, civil servants, between them covering in varying degrees two generations of experience and thought, gave up evenings and weekends to discuss the current malaise. The early birth-panes of PEP occurred during the dying months of the second Labour Government; its progress must be measured against the rapidly deteriorating condition of the country with the tarily three mission unemployed and financial bankruptcy staring us in the face. There was also a bankruptcy in political ideas. The significance of PEP is that a group of young and not so young determined people were prepared to face the challenge of the thirries and by dint of enthusiastic and searching application influence in some measure the course of affairs.

It took years to create a com-. "These", he said in his letter, "are unusual, perhaps

The annual budget has risen from £2,000 in 1931 to an annual expenditure on research of E200,000. It is true that with an increased budget PEP alone (or in conjunction with other bodies) could identify its own projects and in Keynes's words
"study the present in the light

plex of government institutions in Washington bear little resemblance to London, which is close to half a dozen major universities. Secondly, we are suspicious of size. Thirdly there is the danger that the hyresus is the danger that the bureau-cracy of government will be matched by the bureaucracy of research.

Research institutes in Britain are by no means perfect, they could do much more to dissemicould do much more to dissemi-nate the results of their work, they could engage in closer cooperation. PEP could well-double its size in both research, and dissemination. In that case it would have, some of the advantages of size without much risk of losing in efficiency and creativity. It is impossible to over-stress the word creativity and with it the will, the resolution; the determination to sace the challenge of the 70s as a few did in the 30s.

Sir Lewis Namier wrote in a well-known essay: "Stores-men, artists and writers work against a social background of values and ideas produced the common national existence."

I know that similar motives have inspired the various institutes that are Social Research Organizations and the scores of other voluntary bodies that contribute to policy research in Britain.

At least we are still an open society and the existing institutes, some of which like PEP have a national as well as an international status, if they retain courage and creative power, can still have an influence on policy-making in Whitehall and on events outside. Kenneth Lindsay

" We have to do some dogged organizing of women where they are. It will be a slow process." No doubt it will be a change for Mrs Smeal from being a homemaker, but it will not be any less demanding. Sometimes you get the feeling that there is no group of people in this city who do not feel grievously wronged, and who are not banding together to do something about it. On learning of the injustices apparently being meted out to the writers of jingles for tele-vision advertisements, I burried to see Dick Lavsky, President of the Society of Advertising Music Producers, Acrangers and Composers. He formed the group a year ago so the jingle-writing community could fight oppression

Lavsky, wearing a thick woolly cardigan, an open shirt and a near beard, offered me a cup of soup when I arrived in his cramped office and studio. Mounds of technical equipment lined the studio walls. His office was furnished with musical instruments (a drum served as a soup table) and there was a cage of singing parakeets in the corner. On the face of it, jungle writers have little to complain about. "Per minute of re-corded time it is the highest paid sort of writing in the world", Larsky said, sipping his soup and nibbling on saitine crackers. "That's why competition is so great." A jingle usually lasts no more than 28 seconds and the fee is anything between 2,500 and 7,500 dollars. But it is this fierceness of competition, Lavsky maintains, which enables some advertising agents to take advantage of jingle writers. The chief abuse is the free competitive demonstration, in which agents can get dozens of writers to write jingles on spec, but pay only for the one they select. The technique, as Lavsky describes it, is one of greatly concentrated expertise, and only about 200 people make a living at 12. A jingle has to be an entity", he said. I waved good-bye to the parakeet and left, humming through a mot reflecting on the impressive tacing of on the impressive variety of skills that this city embraces.

The specific of the Scottish deemed to be the correct formulation of the conservatives at Perth on Satural lation—though devolution is evidently still regarded as an appropriate objective provided that it is not clear precisely what ay Mrs Thatcher confirmed and appropriate objective provided that it is not clear precisely what this would involve. All this is wery negative and must be offensive to those who believe that policy should be based on clear promises offered to the clear promises offered to the electorate for approval. But it stops well short of being an outright, rejection of an assembly. Both Mrs. Thatcher and Mr Pym spoke of the need for change in the system of govern-ment for Scotland. Mr Pym declared that "nationalism has in practice been the greatest enemy of devolution a proposition that is very different from the argument that devolution would pave the way for inde-pendence. And Mrs Thatcher evidently believes that some kind of assembly will come some time.

Such a cautious stance may not be a glorious position for a major party to adopt on an issue of this consequence, but it accords with political realities. The Conservative party in the House of Commons is over-whelmingly opposed to devolution: In its present mood it would be likely to reject not only the Scotland and Wales Bill but any other one submitted to it with the same purpose. If Mrs Thatcher and Mr Pym had provided a ringing endorsement of the commitment to a directly elected assembly they could have justified this to their followers at Westminster only on the grounds that it was required by the force of opinion within the favour. fused as a great many other people by the whole devolution question. Moreover, no matter what Mrs Thatcher and her colleagues might promise now it is unlikely that a future Conservative government could deliver a Scottish assembly unless there was a considerable change of heart within the party in England—and the history of devolution is disfigured by too many promises that for one reason or another were not kept. It does not seem probable ar this stage that whatever position the Conservatives adopted on devolution would materially affect their prospects at the general election. After twenty disastrous years for the party in Scotland there is some confidence in their transfer than their transfer to the confidence in their transfer transfer to the confidence in the confid dence in their ranks that they will pick up at least a few sears next time. That will depend partly on how unpopular the Government is by then and partly on how votes are distributed geographically between Labour, the SNP and the Con-servatives. But the Conservative attitude to devolution before the election might critically affect the capacity of a Conservative government to deal with Scot-land afterwards. It is regrettable but true that a great deal is likely to hang on the strength of the SNP in the next Parliament. If there are many more SNP members then English opinion may suddenly perceive the need for an assembly. The holding operation that the Conservatives are now conducting should give them as good a chance as they could have, given the state of opinion within the party, of responding to whatever events may be.

its votes are therefore highly plausible.

Mr Peres, who is certainly not a dove by reputation, has none the less sought to shift the emphasis back to the issue of peace, pointing to the unrealism of Likud's not-an-inch stand, while Likud has reacted by denouncing American pressure and promising to resist it. The American Administration is no doubt hoping that Mr Peres will survive as prime minister, but if he does so it is likely to be either in coalition with both Professor Yadin and, once again, the in-transigent National Religious Party, or in a national govern-ment including Likud, like that of 1967-70. In either case he will have plenty of alibis for stonehe wants to, and little room for manoeuvre if he does not. The timing of Mr Carter's pronouncements about the Palestinian homeland may have done Mr Peres's electoral chances little good. But those pronouncements, combined as they have been with a reassertion of America's "special relationship" with Israel and willingness to make sure that she has "adequate means" to defend herself, point forward to problems which the next Israeli government can hardly evade, whatever its composition and whoever its leader.

by unproven allegations about his cost £400,000 and during the nex year may cost Lim. The roll-call of names underwriting the broadsheet and its message still has nearly as much power to move me as an old regiment's standard ambiazoned with battle honours: Barcleys, Courts, Lloyds, Midland, National Westmanster, Williams, and Glyns, Yorkshire (can that be the old Penny Bank?), Bank of Scotland, Clydesdale, and Royal Bank of Scotland.

Scotland. And what is the message? That there is a real public threat to nationalize the four main clearing, banks: "That's what the Labour Party's national executive com-mittee (Nec) recommended last mittee (Nec) recommended last August in a pamphlet called Bunking and Finance. The Government and the Prime Minister are against bank nationalization. Even so, the proposal was passed at the 1976 Labour Party conference."

Is it a "Mr Cube" advertising campaign all over again? That is the question politicians, especially left wing politicians, will immediately ask. In some senses it clearly

ately ask. in some senses it clearly is. Here is the political objective of building up public opinion and bank staff opinion against the threat of nationalization that the big banks have been under, more often on than off, ever since the

But the motives and factics of the big banks, which could bring more movey to bear to influence the country against nationalization than the Labour Party could ever compete with, need a little more examination. 21.5% 47.5

Their campaign is for the time being neutralized politically because Mr Collaghan, the Prime Minister, with the support of a majority of his senior ministers, has taken bank nationalization out of points. To learn bow the banks can claim they are supporting the Prime Minister and the Government we must go back to the eve of last years. Labour Party conference in Black-pool. Mr Callaghan then told his left wing: "I should make my posi-tion clear. I will not be able to recommend the inclusion of this part of the Nec's proposal (national izing banks and insurance institu-tions) in the next election manifesto. It would be an electoral albairess." batress."

That stand alone has made the big banks' anti-nationalization strafe possible. Nobody who has occasional dealings with senior bankers can fail soon to sense that they are ecting live; and that they want to keep out of the political arena. This rime they have taken what for them is an audacious decision by exploiting a political circumstance (Mr 's "albatross") to do what Calleghan's "americas", to ou want in their hearts they want to do, without appearing to come down in favour of one party rather than another. It follows that if Mr Calleghan changed his mind, the pouring out of bank treasure on an anti-nationalization campaign would anti-nationalization campaign would probably be promptly stopped. It would then turn from being a general political issue into a party political issue. Heaven forbid!

Before analysing the big banks' reasoning, let me make clear where my heart lies, so that everybody is free to allow for subjective judgment or even bias; the nationalization of banks and insurance ionalization of banks and insurance companies would be a disaster for the City and the country, and, as the Prime. Minister says, an albatross for Labour. There are 20,000,000 bank customers, more than half the electorate, few of whom want to see the banks operate on political rather than financial considerations when their residual pittance is at stake.

That stated, why do the banks spend on advertising when the Prime Minister tells them it is an unlikely event? Labour scarcely looks capable of winning the next election. Even if it does not, Mr Callaghan or his successor as Labour leader will, like Sir Harold Wilson in 1970, have to prove again his red blooded socialism, and for that proof the banks and insurance companies (which the Wilson Committee now investigates) would be prime targets.

After all, they present a target that the Labour left has aimed at persistently. While the Lib-Lab pact lasts, whether for a few months or a year, the financial institutions may be reckoned immune from threats. But as the general election-comes near, Labour has to produce a socialist manifesto to stoke up party zeal, and it may be doubted whether Mr Callaghan, a born party manager, will by then have the authority, the will, or even the staming to enter into yet another last ditch fight with a left wing on Labour in government is always different from Labour in opposition, especially if the rank and file thinks it is going to be overwhelmed.

The years since March 1974 are on the record for the banks' instruction.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Coroners and transplants

From Dr M. H. Pappworth Sir, it is surprising that there has been no correspondence in your columns following the report from your Legal Correspondent which quoted an instruction to all coroners which stated: "The Home Secretary hopes that as it is not part of a coroner's function to place obstacles in the way of development of medical science or to take moral or ethical decisions in this matter a coroner would never object in principle to a transplant operation. . . . Coroners will be aware that organs for transplant purposes must be remove as soon as possible after the death of the donor and the most effective way to ensure that this is possible is for the coroner to arrange a suitable routine with the beginning and purpose.

hospitals in advance." In other words, coroners are being urged to allow bodies, par-ticularly those who have been in-volved in accidents, to be eviscer-ated as "donors" without bother-ing to obtain the consent of the negrest relatives except in the unlikely contingency that documentary evidence is available that the victim had forbidden this.

In an issue of the British Medical Journal (February 19, 1977) it was claimed that in England improved results of liver transplants had come about mainly because come about mainly because surgeons now remove organs from "donors" whilst their hearts are still beating and they are still breathing. Does this mean that the previously accepted definition of death has now officially been replaced by the concept of "brain death"? May I point out the reputed criteria for "brain death" are still controversial. Doctors may consider that centain laws affecting consider that certain laws affecting their work are stupid and outmoded but that does not give them the right to take the law into their own hands. Moreover any claim to act for the good of society should be regarded with extreme distaste and even with alarm as there is a danger, definite even if it be slight, that such proclaimed altruism may be a high flown expression to cloak outrageous acts. Yours faithfully, M. H. PAPPWORTH. London, NW3.

The cannibal biscuit

From Professor Alan Ward Sir, The Food Standards Committee. Sir, The Food Standards Committee, to which you refer in your third leader of May 12 (surely is should really have been the fourth leader, of past memory) is well acquainted with misleading practices and descriptions. The leader refers to the "latest report" of the Committee quoting from our report on Claims and Misleading Descriptions. This Report is dated 1966 and Is by no means our latest. Many by no means our latest. Many reports have come from our reviews in the intervening period.

The Committee is currently reviewing again the entire field of labelling, as is appropriate after an incerval of more than 10 years, and necessarily will look again at its previous reports on the subject.

One short paragraph from the 1966 Report refers to the general use of the term "digestive" on labels in-cluding its use for biscuits. At that time the Report recommended that the term "digestive" should not be used in the name of any food. No steps have been taken to implement this recommendation.

It does not follow that the Committee would, in today's circumstances, endorse the 1966 view or even consider the matter should occupy further time. At most it constitutes one of many similar areas where words are used with ambiguous meanings. While the Committee is, I am sure, flattered by the attention given to its work by The Times, it would prefer com-ment to be directed to rather more major areas of public concern. I am afreid the element of distortion in your leader does not encourage those, like myself, who have in the past thought it right to be helpful to your reporters when consulted by them. Yours faithfully, ALAN G. WARD, Chairman of the Food Standards Committee. Procter Department of Food and Leather Science, University of Leeds, Leeds.

Tory labour relations From Mr Roger Beson

May 12.

Sir, Your political correspondent's article in The Times of April 27 on factory level wages emphasizes that the so-called syndicalist approach to labour relations by Mrs Thatcher would not win applause from powerful unions.

Some trade unions have always had the majority of their negotia-tions based upon individual com-pany bargaining. In fact, my own organization, ASTMS, is built upon the belief that company bargaining is best. However, two vital factors were missing in the report: 1. Individual firms often mean large multi-site companies, eg, Courtaulds, Pilkington Brothers, Wedgwood, etc, and although there is site bargaining certain issues are common, such as pensions, sick pay scheme, reducdancy agreements/ base line payments, and in this situation group negotiations involv-ing those big bad trade union leaders is often necessary. 2. Certain industries have national wage negotiations because it is in their interests, and many employers would not want company bargaining as this would give those big bad trade union leaders the ability to create certain companies into industry conditions pace setters. Therefore, this new found Conservative policy formula has in fact been reality for many trade unions for a considerable number of years. Yours faithfully.

Next Ambassador in Washington

From Sir Cyril Pickard Sir, I accept that it is of the greatest importance for the Foreign Secre-tary, if he wishes to make a choase, to find the best man for the Washington job. I do not agree with Mr. Noel-Baker (Mar 13) that it is the Moel-Baker (May 15) that it is the only thing that matters.

Since I returned to England three years ago, I have been disturbed by the public cynicism towards our political institutions and our political leaders. Mr Callagnan's achievement has been to do someachievement has been to do some-thing to restore public confidence in the integrity of his high office. If this confidence is again for-feited, as a result of party and partisan emicism, largely from within the Labour Party and the inevitable arrestion, given to these inevitable attention given to these criticisms by the press and tere-vision, the damage done will out-weigh any advantage which might be gained from Mr Joy's appointment. Yours faithfully, C. S. PICKARD, Sommer House, Sevenoaks, Kent. May 13.

From Lord Cumpbell of Eskin Sir, Whether Lord Caccia (May 14), who is Provost of Eton, is the best person to lay down the law on nepotism, and the danger of appointing a Socialist Ambassador to Washington, is I suppose a matter of opinion. But there can surely be only one opinion on the contemptibly bad taste of his postcript. Yours faithfully. Yours fulthfully. CAMPBELL OF ESKAN, Crocker End House, Nextlebed, Oxfordshire.

From Projessor J. E. Morpingo Sir, it is not my intention to comment on the propriety of hir Jay's appointment, and it is not within my competence to pass judgment on his credentials. However, I have been an Anglo-American and an ambassador-watcher since the days of Lord Lothian; I have frequently indulged that pastime for months on end in the company of Americans who are not impressed by Washington or by the gaudy plumage of high officers of state, be they American or British; and I feel therefore that I have the right to protest against the nasty inshus-tions which have been pur about to discredit our present Ambas-

I do not have the privilege of friendship with Sir Peter Rams-botham. Early in his tenure he recaived me courteously at the Embassy and later, during last year's Bicentennial celebrations. I spent several days in his company, away from Washington and in what has come to be known as "grassroots America". I saw him with students. American and British, with local businessmen, with the Governor of Virginia, and with many men and women who are content to be obscure. I was theretore able to confirm with my own cyes reports that have come to me from all over the United States and from all mission of Americans teven from ardent members of the (even from aroent memoers of the vin-Cuacorde lobby): that Sir Peter has been among the most effective, probably the most pupular and certainly the most accessible of all our Ambassadors to the United States.

Labour and the banks From Mr Anthony Taylor

Sir, Norman Atkinson, in his letter published on May 10, reveals a studied ignorance of the banking system. Surely even he can dis-tinguish betwen risk capital and the provision of working capital to a viable enterprise, or does he merely seek to confuse the issue? The Treasury compels the helpless taxpayer to prop up ailing British industries; the banks rely upon their commercial reputation to attract deposits. Will his state bank have powers to compel us to put our money in it? On past performance of state enterprises, it is unlikely to obtain it in any other

A British Brookings

From Dr Robert Skidelsky Sir, The loose phrase "British Brookings" covers a number of quite separate proposals, some of which are more interesting than others. The three main ones are these:

1 An institute for the study of particular subjects: strategic studies, urban studies, social policy, economic policy, organization of economic policy, organization of government, etc. As Sir Eric Roll and Lord Trevelyan point out (Letters, May 6), such institutions

2. An institute to solve Britain's problems by analysing the "British disease", bringing academics and Whitehall into closer contact, providing governments with "rational" policy goals. This notion, as Michael Mitter points out in this week's Times Higher Education Supplement, suffers from the technicratic illusion; also, as Professor Beloff writes (Letters, May 6), any institution resulting from it could simply become an offshoot of the Establishment. The other point is that Britain's problems are not though its disease parochial even may be terminal.

3. This leads to the third, and think most attractive function or a "British Brookings": to bring I think most attractive, function for a "British Brookings": to bring concentrated knowledge from relevant disciplines to bear on the contemporary crisis of our political economy. The purpose would be to preserve a free society. Its rationale would be that it is only through an increase in social knowledge and an improvement in social ledge and an improvement in social technique that the growing crisis of political economy can be solved democratically. That such a crisis exists, with growing menace to free institutions, not just in this country but in the Western world as a whole, has been the assumption of most commentators and politicians since the late 1960s. Here is one exciting and necessary way to confront it. Yours faithfully,

ROBERT SKIDELSKY. Head of the Department of History, Philosophy and European Studies, Polytechnic of North London, Prince of Wales Road, NW5. May 6.

Jubilee decorations

From Sir Brian Batsford Sir, I wonder whether the designs for the Jubilee decorations now being erected in Trafalgar Square and elsewhere were first submitted to the Design Council. Yours faithfully, BRIAN BATSFORD, The Manor, Wyke Champilower, Somerset.

Newspapers in London

From Mr G. J. Norwood

Sir, The fascinating point about Mr L. J. Cadbury's letter to The Times today (May 10) is that the Daily News Trustees still hold funds to "assist" survivors of the News Chronicle and The Star who are "financial difficulties.".

Unfortunately not many of the 3.500 employees dismissed in 1960 read The Times and may be unaware of his upexpected generosity. If they do hear, I can only advise them to get in touch with the Secretary of the Trustees of the Daily News Charitable Fund at 46-47 Chancery Lane, London, WC2.

Of course there are some ample funds available. The Charity Commissioners inform me that there are the Daily News Charitable Fund the Daily News Benevolent Fund. The balance-sheet for the period ended April 5, 1976, shows that the former fund had an excess of income over expenditure of f123,839, and the latter fund, £42 456

After Daily News Limited went into voluntary liquidation on April 21, 1976, there was a distribution of shares, and the Cadbury trustees put a further £99,709 into the Charitable Fund and £39,358 into the Benevolent Fund. Also, at the time of liquidation Mr L. J.

Cadbury and his son Adrian made a Declaration of Solvency certify-ing that Daily News Limited had an estimated surplus "after paying debts in full" of £428,899. I obtained this information from Companies House.

What is distressing about Mr Cadbury's letter is the implication that former employees will only be "assisted" if they can prove they are in "financial difficulties". Many of my News Chronicle colleagues are too proud to declare themselves paupers and will probably not ask for a grant.

But surely moral principles are involved? The compensation paid to us, which Mr Cadbury claims through successfully nuserable by present day standards. Even in 1960 redundant Fleet Street journalists were paid one month's salary for each year of service. Yet in my case I was paid only three-quarters of a week's pay for each of the 25 years. I received £600. I calculate I ought to have received £2,900 Today, any Fleet Street journalist with 25 years' service can expect redundancy payment of at least 10 000 £10,000.

The telephone refund

From the Chairman of the Post Office Users' National Council Sir. The correspondence in your columns since the Post Office announced on May 4 its decision to refund £7 per exchange line to telephone subscribers has emphasized the lack of equity in the proposed methods of repayment. Some of your readers have also justifiable complained that a more imaginative handling of the refund could have given greater satisfaction to subscribers and benefit to the Post Office.

The Post Office Users' National Council were in fact asked to consider a scheme of direct repayment that the Post Office had already published in detail. The administrative costs of the scheme proposed will approach 1250,000. On the other hand, if refunds were related more closely to customers accounts, we are told that these costs would be substantially higher and repayment would be further delayed. In these circumstances, the POUNC had no alternative but to accept a certain amount of rough justice as inevisable. Nevertheless, we are convinced that this compulsory repayment could have made a greater contricould have made a greater contri-bution towards the building of pubpution towards the building of public goodwill and had less prejudicial effect upon the efforts of Post Office personnel to reduce operational costs.

Office personnel to reduce operational costs.

If there had been genuine consultation, more detailed consideration would have been given to the manner of this distribution.

We understand that the Post Office was first given formal notice by the Price Commission that it had exceeded its profit levels on April 4. COUNC had intimation of the position only a few hours before I personally met senior Post Office officials on May 4 when Council's endorsement of the proposals was requested. I was informed that the Post Office were concurrently meet-Post Office were concurrently menting the Price Commission and an mmediate announcement planned.

Naturally, I refused to accede to the Post Office request, I strongly urged that the Post Office should not announce the details of their proposal for refunding the £100 million excess profits until the Council had had the opportunity to consider the many ways in which the refund might be made. This the Post Office ignored and went ahead with the announcement. The Council had its first opportunity to hear the Post Office case on May 11.
All this made a farce of consultation, and I should like through your columns to register the Council's strong protest at the totally inadequate manner in which the views of POUNC were sought.

Yours faithfully,

PEDDIE, Chairman, Post Office Users' National Council, Waterloo Bridge House, Waterloo Road, SE1.

Cape Horn hazards From Mr J. C. Binns

Sir, The award of the islands off Cape Horn is, I think, well deserved, because Chile performed a very welcome service in these waters in 1908 when President Theodore Roosevelt despatched the great White American Fleet on its roundthe world voyage. However, great fears were expressed about the ter-rible hazards of navigation.

There were stories of whirlpools that could twist a ship completely around . . . of wild winds called "Williwaws" that could hurl a yessel on to the rocks. The French Admiral Gervais warned of "per-plexing currents". The Western Morning News of Plymouth pictured the scattered ships ramming each other. The Secramento Union con-jured the worst nightmare of all— shipwrecks and cannibalism: "We don't want any of our jackies eaten by the terrible Tierra del Fuegans". Nobody dined on the blue ackets. Chile thoughtfully despatched the cruiser Chacabuco to guide the fleet through, and she skilfully led it by Cape Forward, through the S-curve of Crooked Reach and out into the Pacific.

A few islands would seem a well carned rewards for such a service. Yours faithfully, I. C. BINNS. Coombe Contage, Coombe Lane, Asti, Capterbury.

60,000th issue From Major Hugh Walter

Sir, May I question the accuracy of one point in your leader "The past in our present" (May 11)?
Writing of the mid-Victorian period, when the reduction of the tax on newspapers made it possible to produce them really cheaply, you say that it was Delane who made the decision "to go for quality rather than circulation", and not to lower the standards of The Times in order to compete with the new journals in terms of price.

The "History of The Times".
(vol II, chapter XIV—"The New Journalism"), makes clear that so fundamental a decision about the future of the paper did not fall within the Editor's province; it could only be made by the man who, as Chief Proprietor, supported Delane unswervingly throughour the last thirty-two years of his long editorship: John Walter III. Yours truly,

HUGH WALTER, Shepherds Cottage, Blaxhall Heath, Woodbridge.

It is my hope that both these figures will continue to increase. Yours sincerely P. C. SHAPLAND, Director, Volunteers, Territorials and Cadets, Ministry of Defence, Lansdowne House Berkeley Square, W1.

In his book Dr Dominian says Christianity has become identified with opposition to sexual pleasure, which is only moral within marriage. "By making sexual pleasure and biological openness to life the key to all. morality, the theologian had a simple task, but as a result the church has a theology of sexuality whose simplicity tends towards naivety."

A number of Anglican and Roman Catholic theologians are giving Dr Dominian's book a cautious welcome, and refusing to comment publicly until they have studied it in detail. have studied it in detail.

The General Synod of the Church of England has private member's motion down calling for a new look at the whole theology of Christian sexuality in the light of present theological and psychological understanding " and thought that the book will figure prominently in the Dr Dominian says there is. still a conviction, particularly and among churchmen, that adolescent masturbation is harmful and sinful He writes: "One way of exploring and accepting through masturbation, for in this way the new dimensions of the body are discovered and their intrinsic goodness arknowledged and incorporated in the omerging personality.

"The puberral tody is not primarily designed for pro-creative purposes it is a stage of identity grown which pre-pares the way for adult personal relationships. To bring forward the application of a sexual morelity of marriage to puberty is a notion that has no possible justification."

He declares that other sexual acts tradicionally regarded by Christians as sinful can also be justified in their context. "In the privacy of their homes men and women express their love in a way they know is authentic. and here as elsewhere Christianity can only become increasingly a centre of a conspiracy of silence if it does not consider openly the values inherent in such activity."

Dr. Dominian classes sexual activity outside marriage according to a spectrum ranging from promisently to relationships that have all the elements of marriage short of legal status. No single morel judgment could do justice to the entire pange, and the condemnation of them all as fornication was inspectpriate.

Geophysics: Pulsating auroras

Auroral displays, or "Northern Lights" which flash on and off at 10-second intervols, have been pro-duced by scientists at the Univer-sity of Alaska by releasing barlum report into the upper atmosphere. The production of these pulsating auroras was completely unexpected and the technique promises to provide valuable chies to the way

Electrons precipitated from the radiation belts interact with the atoms in the upper atmosphere to produce curtains of light in the sky. To produce those displays requires typically 100 million electrons crossing a square centimetre every accord. The electrons travel backwards and forwards along the magnetic field lines that surround the Earth and penetrate into the atmosphere near the Poles. Somewhere along those field lines the electrons that produce the pulsating displays must be modulated by a wave phenomenon and the indi-

The unexpected finding is that when the cloud was released above the diffuse grow of a natural amova it induced pulsating auroral displays beneath the cloud. There are no predictions or obvious explanations of inat, phenomenoa but it now appears feasible to generate certain types of auroral displays. Under those conditions it is, much easier to learn what is 20ing on and the scientist has some control over the stuation rather control over the situation rather than just watching and waiting. Pig farmers victims of lack of ministerial coordination Further lack of coordination, if not rivalry, between the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Prices and Consumer-Protection came to light last week. It had happened to been before, and now it has happened to bacon. Pig farmers will be among the victims. Mr Austin Mitchell, the new Labour MP for Grimsby, asked in one of his first written parhamentary questions if the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection planned further references to the Price Commission.

The supposed acrimony between Mr Hattersley and Mr Silkin, blinster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, is a favourite topic of gossip in the food industry this year. It is said that Mr Silkin, the wartime seaman, resents the bounding ambition of his younger colleague. Mr Hattersley, the biographer of Nelson, is reported in turn to resent Mr Silkin's portrayal of blunself as the minister who holds down food prices.

It was unforminate for Mr Hat-; It was unformmate for Mr Hatment's inability to restrain shup prices. It may, however, mean more than that.

Little more than a year ago the Price Commission issued a report

It may be a coincidence that last week's question to Mr Hattersley about bacon was answered just before Mr Sillin faced angry crit-cism about pigs in an important Commons debase about agricul-

It is possible that Mr Hattersley and his officials did not know that the "importation and distribution of bacon" had already been examof bacon" had already been examined by the meat products working

Mr Haitersley's intervention-could not therefore have come at a worse time from the trade's point, of view, He said: "I wish to have worse time irom he franc's point, of view, He said: "I wish to have a factual report examining the prices and costs at the various stages in the distribution chain, in order to check that the sinuation is not being exploited."

Mr Silkin, meanwhile, can shelter behind the pig subsidy that he has extracted from the Treasory and for which he is to be arraigned in the European Court. Whenever farmers complained about the Government's inability to belp the pig industry against EEC opposition last year. Mr Silkin had no defence. Now he can hide behind the subsidy.

The British pig industry is the main wichin of the hairle between the Government and the rest of the EEC over the Common Agricultural Policy. The main suppliers of pig meat to this country, the Danes and the Dutch, insist that the pain of British pig producers must be easted only by why producers must be

Home loans and the true rates of interest From Mr Norman E. Griggs

Sir, On May 3 Mr C. R. Tew suggested that building socie-ties should disclose the true rates of interest, alongside the nominal rates of interest, on all documents relating to home

There is no secrecy about the fact that where a building society calculates morrgage inrerest on the balance of the capital debt outstanding at the beginning of its financial year, the true rate of interest is slichely higher than the nominal rate. The problem for these societies is to state the true rate because this will very with the actual life of the mortgage as distinct from the period for which it was originally

Take the case of a mortgage arranged at 11.25 per cent over 25 years. The equivalent true 25 years. The equivalent true rate of interest calculated on calendar monthly belances would be 11.38 per cent, but does this leave the borrower very much the wiser? The average mortgage runs for only eight years or so and for periods shorter than 25 years the true to bour only 138. periods shorter than 25 years, the true rate is lower than 11.38 per cent. The shorter the actual life of the mortgage, the smaller is the mortgage, the true rate an diffe nominal rate. Also the race of mortgage interest is likely to change fairly frequently. For these reasons any true rate stated in advance can only be a theoretical conception.

Of course, at the rail-end of a 25-year amony moregage the Amon amond rate of interest on the Rend outstanding balances is coin. Exerc paratively high, but, if the local May

EEC restrictions on handloom garments from India

From Mr Ian MacArthur is required in your columns to the inaccurate and misleading letter (May 9) of Mr Alers-Rankey about the recent REC measures to restrain the imports of certain handloom garments accounting.

Hammerson Property & Invest-ment Trust refuses to be drawn by the inflation accounting lobby into the expensive game of regular valuations. It takes the view that holding properties at cost and revaluing only on completion of a development, a major letting, or some other material event altering a property's investment value, i is giving as realistic a picture of pertiudio value as any.

This conservative approach left properties in the hooks at £169.4m last year. Revaluations between 1968 and 1976 threw to an attributable, but not consolidated, surplus of £66.9m. And even this surplus excluded any other elements of reservations. and even this surplus excluded any other element of reversionary growth and is based on a cautious 7.1 per cent aggregate yield from current income. Efforts to cut development commitments, and short-term borrowings are near completion. Development commitments, now mainly oversess, are down from 1975s, £14m to £7.7m. Property cales raised £58.2m (£22m relating to the sale and leaseback of the Brent Cross Shopping Centre to Standard Life Assurance) helping to cut short-term debts by £13m and longer-term debts by £13m and longer-term borrowings by £21.6m.

longer-term borrowings by EZI.6m.
Exchange adjustments of E24.8m leave the overall debt picture much the same but the borrowing profile has been improved and the desiled breakdown of long-term loans shows that well over half of the E155.2m long-dated debt is held notill after the turn of the century. Inserest on this longer debt avorages less than 8 per cent.

The quality of the balance sheet is matched by the conservative revenue account treat-ment. Pre-tax profits of £3.8m exclude £3.6m of net development outgoings, but deferred classes are set against cerence from the development and any surplus on property sales. A 13-5m sales surplus last year is, prevelore, previded as an entre ordinary credit. in the exchange rate, was the only thing that really martered, and that some hidden hand would produce the required microeconomic result; or you believed that improved performance would only come from policies directly aimed at British industry and com-Significantly both Sir Harold Wilson and Mr Heath were in this context ex-Presidents of the Board of Trade not ex-Chancellors. Their administrations were unusually influenced in the one case by frith that industrial reorgan-tration would help and in the other by conviction that the reason why we were doing so badly was that we did not have German-style "universal

Now, however, from the National Economic Development Office itself,

In the old days you were either a - faith, has come a major statement not Treasury man, or a Board of Trade about industrial strategy but about exchange rate policy. It took the form of an attack by Mr David Stout, the economic adviser, on the established doctrine that to devalue early and to devalue often is either a necessary or a sufficient condition for the creation of export-led growth." At the same time, since the end of last year the authorities have abandoned any logical exchange rate policy.

Their terric of helding the fis exchange rate at $1.71 seems to have little science behind it. It is just the rate to which the f revived after the horrors of 1976, buttressed by the undersandable hope that it would be nice if the rate could be induced to stay there for

For those who think that floating exchange rates since 1972 have in practice been destabilizing for markers as well as for industry, this policy represents a tentative experiment in returning to a fixed exchange rate

Meanwhile, as a concession to those who think that the exchange rate should take account of high domestic inflation, the S is being held down to stop British exports losing all recently gained price advantage. This ad hac compromise, based on no real model of how the economy behaves, is now coming under increasingly frequent attacks. Economists like Wyane Godley and politicians like Mr Ervan Gould on the one hand argue that if the enchange rate is not deliberately pushed down the economy will stagniste forever and unemploymen: rice further. Others, including this week an interesting circular from stockbrokers Fichting Newson Smith, take the view that by holding down the exchange rate fleering and golden opportunity is being thrown away of reducing reflationary pressures in the economic end of starting a virtuous circle of industrial and escendic performance.

The orthodox objection to this is that since our relative rate of inflation is still so high, it cannot intuitively be a sensible thing to do. Those who string this, however, must accept the validity of much of Mr Stout's thesis, namely that devaluation can only have a short-term benefit where "there as relevant spare capacity available." The emphasis is on the word relevant.

Is sterling strong enough to stand on its own feet? international groups and national and international oligopolies on the supply side and with so much of demand coming from governments and other nationalist sources it would be quite possible that the total net short-term, and even medium term effects of a devaluation in an economy like ours would be negative. It would explain why we always seem to be on the first downward stroke of the J-curve so beloved by devaluers. In particular, since no one knows what the right rate is for sterling and since we do not want the short-term cost of financing hot money inflows, might it not indeed be better to let the exchange rate find its own level? Everyone would allow that the authorities should operate in market to smooth violent fluctuations. Bur how long must a fluctuation go on hefore smoothing becomes deliberate interference? Are the authorities so confident of their economic and industrial policies that they are ready to distort evident market forces? A Conservative industrial policy for Britain

What would a Tory govern ment do about industry's problems? That is a question one often hears. Significantly, it is not industrialists who ask it (I suspect most would be bappy if we did less) but an anxious public, over-persuaded that every problem has to have a political solution. We would in-tervene less, but I doubt that we would or should, abstain completely from intervention.

What does industry need from government? First, the right economic and social climate for it to prosper. Pre-tax rates of return (at replacement cost) by industry in the United Kingdom have fallen from 14 per cent in 1960, to 4 per cent must be to create the right framework to helt this decline in replacement cost return. As Conservacives we believe in Conservatives we believe in free atterprise. We want to see it achieving good profits, acting responsibly, and encouraging participation from grass roots upwards.

Providing we succeed in this, do we need a Department of Industry? We need a different emphasis in the Department of Industry, For 20 years governments have involved them.

ments have involved them-selves in industry, most specifically with regional policy and research effort.

A Conservative govern would want to promote industrial development in the regions. From Quintin Hogg (now Lord Hailsham) in the early sixtles to Chris Chetsway in the seventies we have worked hard to spread industrial development more even-ly; we shall continue this work and; set up a cost-effec-tiveness review of regional.

How effective has Section 7 assistance been working with industrial Development Certificare (IIIC) policy, to promote the ferrous foundry scheme regioned development? Have and machine advance factories been a useful incentive? Is it sensible that 750,000 sq.ft of advance factory space have been empty through the sector working for over a year? of American visitors, experienced in the last few years, ceased and was reversed. There was also a considerable increase in visitors from Europe and the Middle East.

As a result, the last six months of 1976 yielded a profit of £1,211,173, as compared with a profit in the first six months of £26,000. There was thus a spectacular change at the end of the year in the Company's financial fortunes.

In this Jubilee year, we expect the number of visitors to increase further, from all parts of the world, and as the peak months approach all our available accommodation is likely to be occupied. That we are or certainly will my our best to be, equal to the challenge, I think goes without saying, but it is a peculiar disadvantage of an hotel business that it cannot usually cut its costs significantly when business is bad, just as it cannot, when business is good, take advantage of demand in excess of the accommodation it has available. Within these limits however, we expect in our horels to have a very good year, as we do in all our restaurants, as well as in banqueting and in all the many auxiliary services we provide.

L have always found it odd that employers who are extremely specific with information about some kinds of behaviour—operating machines, for example—ride away from other matters which are equally influential. You do not teach someone to work a particular machine by making general comments about machinery at large—and you do not develop large—and you do not develop a sease of comfort and con-sideration in a job by raking at large about the company image.

Company image accepted too completely many imponists, by consess, buy the company image secondly. They may have a view of the world which has managers sixting on a hoard of information which snables them to determine future deterlopments (the core of Galbraith's "technostructure"), but which they refuse to share but which they refuse to share.

The idea that a company can plan and achieve the employment of, say, 1,000 people in each of 20 plants over three years is widespread. Yet many managers would rather not ralk show it than diminish their "scame" by sharing uncertainty.

Exchanging information in useful wave requires some trust and some shared conventions. It also requires to be considerate in action as well as in principle. For example, most directors of large companies say that they approve of union officals responsible for steward training their spevards. reality that is quite different; if managers as a whole had readily conceded time off for training, the Employment Pro-tection Act would not have imposed it. In the long run we have to develop conventions which genuinely encompass both what goes on and what people say goes on.

Throughout the 10 years or so which it has been in opera-tion in Britain, KFC, with less than half the number of shops as Winpy, has been able to spend twice as much on adver-tising. In 1975, for instance, KFC's expenditure on narrough newspaper and television advertising alone totalled over £200,000 (doubled in the following year) against less than £70.000 spent by Wimpy.

Yes. Let's go into business together.

URING the bad times, your training programmes have suffered. You've been finding - like most employers - that you simply can't afford your usual investment in raw, untrained talent. Yet you know that without a continuing development of essential skills, your business can't survive in the long term.

Now the economy seems to be turning the corner, perhaps it's time to take stock.

We don't ask you to do it unaided. There are generous grants, and a whole range of national schemes, open to almost all employers willing to bring young people into their business.

Some of these schemes are new. Some have been around for some time. All have full CBI and TUC backing. We say you could use any or all of them to your company's advantage. Find out if we're right.

The Work Experience Programme

Helps build tomorrow's workforce today Some 670,000 school-leavers this year will be seeking work. The majority will be successful. Many will be disappointed. These youngsters need to feel useful and be useful. You can help; and with your help we can turn a problem into an opportunity.

We ask you to take on young people and give them Work Experience; help build their confidence, sort out their aptitudes, give them the chance to prove their ability and keenness, learn work discipline, and gain vital experience.

We'll help you write a programme. You can select your own candidates (some firms have given first choice to employee's children). You pay them an allowance of £16 a week. We reimburse you in full with a minimum of fuss and paperwork.

Enlightened self-interest This programme works both ways. Big companies such as Chrysler, Nat West, and ICI have found that what started as an exercise in social responsibility has brought positive personnel benefits: in some cases an important preview of training talent, closer labour relationships, a reassessment of the potential of apparently underqualified young people.

These companies experiences have been shared by hundreds of small businesses across the country; could you benefit too? Details available from your local Work Experience Office.

Grants and Awards for Employers

To maintain and, where practical, expand apprenticeship and other trainee schemes for young people, the Training Services Agency has funds available through your Industrial Training Board to help with the cost of first year training for extra recruits.

Grants are also available for employers providing experience for college based sandwich course students.

Details vary from industry to industry: For specific information contact your ITB; or if your industry does not have one phone John McKelvey (01-8361213).

Government Subsidies

Three on-going subsidies run by the Department of Employment can help keep your staff and assist with recruitment and thus keep

Youth Employment Subsidy Offers £10 a week, for 20 weeks, for those you take on, who have been registered as continuously unemployed for six months and were under 20 at 1st Oct. 1976. (Scheme closes 31st Aug. 1977.)

Temporary Employment Subsidy Faced with making workers redundant, this subsidy gives you time to re-equip and redeploy. It can pay £20 per head per week for up to a year, and £10 a week for up to a further six months, to help you avoid redundancies.

Job Release Scheme Older workers in assisted areas can opt to stop work up to a year early, and get £23 a week tax free. You take on a younger worker, perhaps with a more relevant skill. (Scheme

You can get details of all these subsidies from the Department of

Short-course Training

The Training Services Agency runs Short Industrial Courses usually lasting three months, to train 16-18-year-olds to operator or junior clerk level in many occupations.

These courses are run in Skillcentres, Colleges of Further Education and Employers' establishments.

--- If-you can offer suitable training facilities the TSA would liketo hear from you. You will be recompensed, and the young people you train will receive a weekly allowance.

If you recruit young people from these courses you are selecting youngsters who are already motivated to work and have received basic training in a particular occupation.

Contact your local district office of the TSA.

Job Creation Programme

You can plan, organise, and manage a scheme lasting up to 12 months which will provide short-term employment for people who would otherwise be unemployed, and which will be of benefit to the local Job Creation Programme pays approved wage costs, plus up to 10% towards the running costs of projects (in certain circumstances). Contact your local Job Creation Office.

Let's help each other

There are many ways we can help you build up your workforce. You can help us. First, by making sure that your personnel people know about these schemes. Second, by using them yourself. Third, by notifying us of any vacancies you may have for young people.

In particular we feel the Work Experience Programme is breaking new ground, and showing proven mutual benefits to employers and young people. It's a bold answer to a big problem: the higher the unemployment in your locality the more we need your help.

Talk to us. You'll get direct action from any of the offices listed above with the facts you need, and a presentation if you'd like one. Or if you'd like more details first, your local Jobcentre, Employment Office or Careers Office has full information on all these schemes.

important factor in the improvement was the increased volume of land sales. Although land sales are expected to be substantial in 1977, they will not be as high as the record level of 1976. Accordingly, earnings of Markborough will be below those of 1976 but are budgeted to Having carved an early and sizable slice of the Middle Eastern construction marker, while at the same time showing resilience in face of the building recession at home, George Wimpey for 1977 is in "good shape", particularly in technical expertise and productive capacity. At home a satisfactory workload has been secured and the indications for private housing are better than expected to-wards the end of 1976, writes Mr R. B. Smith, chairman, in his annual statement. But the level of new inquiries is still depressed, he says, and he urges that the Government's economy measures be centred on revenue rather than capital

Meanwhile its record overseas workload was further boosted in 1977 and emphasiz-ing again the marked strides it is making abroad. This was it is making abroad. This was particularly the case in Canada, where Wimpey had a "strong and expanding" business, and in the Middle East. In the latter region its involvement has grown significantly and work s also expected to start in some new countries this year.
Its resilience at home is reflected in pre-tax profits for 1976, some 14 per cent higher at £44.5m on a workload up £110m to £652m.

Carrying into effect a policy of selling off in order to surtax status. vive, Fitzwilton, Dublin-based conglomerate, emerges from the gloom of 1975-76 with a turn-round into the black and resumption of an interim dividend for the half to December 31. In the preceding full year it. turned in an after-tax loss of 53.26m. But then a £32.8m disposals programme transformed the balance sheet. The elimina-tion of its debt burden and rationalization and part sale of the fertiliser loss maker busi-ness meant the group was budgeting for a return to pro-firs in 1976-77.

In a rebound from a loss of f1.7m to a profit of £105,000-pre-tax for the half to end-December, it pays an interim dividend of 1.5p a share. This is out of a virtually tax-frea

Mr Tony O'Reilly, deputy chairman, explains that cause of the timing of the sale of its investment in National Mine Service last October, the half-time results show a torted picture of both interest payments and profits attributable to associates. If these items had occurred at the start of the half, pre-tax profits would have been £317,000.

An exceptional loss of £239,000 on the sale of the Williams companies notes was due to the fluctuation of the dollar exchange rate between June 30 last and the date of sale. An extraordinary net profit of some £830,000 arose on the sale of the holding in NMS.

Goulding Chemicals have improved over the corresponding period but it is still a lossmaker. The group's 50 per cent share of this for the balf was about £600,000. Because of the seasonal nature of the business, the attributable loss for the full year to end-June should not exceed some 2500,000. Generally, the outlook for the rest of the year is "satisfac-tory" and his board forecasts that the overall outcome will show a profit. Earlier this month it was announced that the Leventis Group had agreed to buy Daly. the soft drinks division.

Points from Statement of the Chairman Sir James Woodeson, CBE, TD.

The trading profit for the year ended 31st December 1976, derives substantially from activities other than our UK power station boiler business which is currently under review following the report of the Central Policy Review Staff on the future of the UK power plant industry.

There was a significant improvement in the results of these other activities which cover a diverse range of products in mechanical handling, marine and mining ... equipment, and energy and process plant.

The diversification which has been achieved in recent years means that about 80% of our turnover now lies outside the supply of major boiler plant for UK power Company liquidity continued to improve during 1976 and the strong balance sheet provides support for future ... capital investment both for the development of existing..... activities and in new businesses.

The Company started 1977 with a reasonable forward order book including a substantial export content. We are directing considerable effort to increasing market penetration particularly overseas, and believe that our diversified activities provide a firm base for the longer term development of our business.
